

Dear Intending Trainers

We are much looking forward to working with you on the “Educational Theory for GP Training” course. This is part of the expected preparation for all trainers in Yorkshire and Humber wishing to become a trainer.

The course aims to provide you with a range of educational theory to make your future work as a trainer more interesting and productive. For parts of the course, we will be working in breakout rooms so that you have a chance to practice skills and share areas that you are concerned about.

Training requires that you have skills in teaching practical skills to other people. So one element of the course is that you need to prepare to teach your colleagues on the course a skill. This can be either medical (how to examine a joint for example) or non-clinical (how to iron a shirt has been used in this setting before) but since we are working virtually needs to be a skill that you can teach virtually...

Before you come please think about what you want to teach one of your colleagues and bring the resources that you need to carry out your teaching activity.

You will only need to prepare for about 5 minutes of skills teaching.

With best wishes

Drs Mike Tomson, David Rose, Chris Webb
